vehiclesIs there no more Friday night television? It's like the world's biggest hangover. It's always the same thing: the same hackneyed TV shows from the same tired actors, and the same inconsequential news stories. Not that the abundance of shitty, exploitative entertainment or the banal nature of our news isn't something to be concerned about. But something is missing. It's Friday night. And what about it? You could, of course, watch HBO's Barry this evening. I suppose you could watch Empire this evening. Or perhaps you'd enjoy a bit of Brooklyn Nine-Nine, but you'll just enjoy it more without the added agony of having to watch it with the rest of us. It's Friday, after all. But you can't just choose not to watch what someone else likes. That would be a kind of sanctimony. Aren't we supposed to be free? Aren't we supposed to choose what we like, and not let others choose for us? Well, we are free. But not everyone in the world is free to do what they want. If you're in China, that's true. There's a central government that rules the nation's authoritarian one-party state with an iron fist, and if that's not oppressive enough for you, it's likely that the government will, under certain circumstances, take steps to prevent you from reading or viewing a book or a movie or a TV show. If you're in Saudi Arabia, that's also true. There's a central government that rules the country with an even greater iron fist than its Chinese counterpart, and the Saudi dictatorship has, under certain circumstances, taken steps to prevent its citizens from watching HBO's Game of Thrones. And so on. On some level, these regimes treat their citizens very much the way the all-powerful Entertainment Merchants do with us here in North America. They don't want people watching things that will challenge their
