1973 to provide instruction to Anglican priests who are licensed for the ministry in Eastern Ontario. Historically, a portion of the diocese of St. John's, Newfoundland has been within the diocese of St. John's, Newfoundland.

History The original mission of St. John's Eastern Region was to "provide for the training of priests in the Eastern part of the Diocese of St. John's, Newfoundland and the parishes therefrom." The original founding vision for the region was to ensure that the people of Eastern Ontario would have access to quality training in parish ministry. The first area of responsibility in the region was the area of Napanee, York County, Ontario. In 1980 the formation of a new diocese, St. John's, Newfoundland and Labrador, created an additional area of responsibility for the Region.

was part of the group working on the community strategy which involved looking at how to involve everyone in the community in the process of decision making that was going to effect them. What is the situation at the moment where you are involved in the campaign and what is the response? We have come up to date with the state electoral laws and everyone is free to stand in their own electorate, while we are also identifying places where we have a good chance of winning, and supporting people in areas that we think we have a good chance of winning in. So I am speaking at community groups and local bodies, helping to register people, supporting people who have started campaigns, and holding events for people in those places.
Where you have good opportunities is in the inner city areas, where you've got lots of potential voters. We have three major inner city communities where we have a chance of winning, and we have some campaigning in places like Peterhead. Can you describe what you do, and how you do it? The campaign team which is me and [campaign co-ordinator] Samantha Ford. We have a very small team who work very closely with local councils to identify electoral wards that we believe have a potential to win, and then identify the people and communities that we need to work with to support them in their campaigning.
