Programs have a feature called the Layers palette, which is essentially a window in Photoshop that allows you to create and edit multiple layers of the image. Layers enable you to improve the quality of the image by working on different aspects of the photo at once. As with all programs, there are many ways to make changes to an image. You can use any of the following methods to manipulate a photograph in Photoshop. Save as a new document You can save a photo in Photoshop as a new document. (See Book IV, Chapter 4, which covers how to create and save a new document.) You can keep working on an existing document as many times as you like, and when you want to save the image as a new document, just choose File⇒Save As. Create a new layer Another way to save an image is to create a new layer. When working in Photoshop, you typically work with eight layers: three for the area where the new image will be placed, three for the new image, and one for the background. You work with layers by creating them, moving them, and editing them. When you create a new layer, it's made as a transparent layer — something that's visible on top of every other layer, and thus it doesn't have any of the image data beneath it, just the transparent white background color. If you want to see a layer that's created, just highlight the layer and you see the name of the layer. You can also make new layers by choosing Layer⇒New Layer or Layer⇒Layer from the menu bar. Use the Layers palette The Layers palette (shown in Figure 7-1) enables you to view and edit the different layers in an image, including changing the color of the background or the color of individual layers. The Layers palette is the visual representation of how the image is structured, including the various layers that make up the photo. Figure 7-1: The Layers palette shows you the different layers in an image. To use the Layers palette, click its icon (it looks like a layer with a small box around it) on the left side of the Photoshop window (see the tip earlier in this chapter). Figure 7-1 shows that the background layer is selected and therefore open for editing. You can expand and collapse the different layers in an image by clicking the little layer icon next to the layer name in the L

Various products such as wine bottles, cosmetics containers, beverage cans and the like are generally known. In recent years, such containers (hereinafter referred to simply as "bottles") have been made thinner to lighten the weight of the containers, to reduce the size of the container, to increase their transparency, and to make it easier to handle the containers. Such containers, however, are difficult to grip and hold as the walls of the containers (particularly the lower corners) are thin. Moreover, in the case of a thinned, transparent container, the surface of the container cannot be seen through the container, so that it is difficult to determine when and where the bottle has been touched by, for example, the user's hand, and that can give an unpleasant feeling when, for example, drinking a beverage in the bottle. In addition, these containers are also difficult to recycle after use, and when they are recycled, the shapes and configurations of the containers may be destroyed. In an effort to prevent these problems, in recent years, the use of a bottle in which the bottle walls are reinforced by providing the bottle with a looped strip has been proposed. For example, in Japanese Patent Application Publication No. 2004-290238, the lower corners of a bottle are reinforced by providing a looped strip which is looped at the lower corners of the bottle, and which has a diameter larger than the diameter of the opening of the bottle. Moreover, in Japanese Patent Application Publication No. H11-81380, a looped strip and a reinforcing strip of the same shape as the looped strip are provided at the lower corners of the bottle, the reinforcing strip overlapping the looped strip. In the case of the looped strips described in the above-mentioned Patent Applications, the bottom of the bottle is provided with a reinforcing body, and this reinforcing body fits into a locking groove provided in the looped strip. Furthermore, in Japanese Patent Application Publication No. H11-255775, a handle-shaped looped strip is provided at the lower corners of a bottle, the bottom of the bottle is provided with a reinforcing body, and the reinforcing body fits into a locking groove provided in the looped strip. Furthermore, in Japanese Patent Application Publication No. 2003-51093, a looped strip is provided at the lower corners of a bottle, the bottom of the bottle is provided with a reinforcing body, and the reinforcing body fits into a locking groove provided in the looped strip.

What's New in the Photoshop CS4?

Pages Monday, October 25, 2011 A place to show off your stitching. The design is 'Daniel' who recently had a pedicure. I thought it would be fun to make her something to remind her of her visit to the salon. The design is pulled from our The Miss Mustard Seed Garden Quilt pattern. I had made a sampler earlier this summer which I had never shown before, so I thought I would make a quilt. I decided on a color scheme of our farm colors: rust, yellow, green, tan and cream. I used some new fabric for this pieced center... I think it is my favorite fabric...it has such a great sheen. But I needed a matching border. So I decided to make it a true patchwork border. And I made a back using the same design as the front...my new favorite technique: just-in-time stitching. I used my Pfaff Crosse Sewing Machine to stitch all the blocks together. I used a right sides together, stitch 1/4 inch from the edge of the fabric...never think about where the needle should be...you will figure that out once you try it. This is what the backs look like when the sewing is done. Before I shipped the quilt to Miss D, I had a fun experience. I wanted to put some embroidery on the front...but I couldn't find the little green leaves. So I embroidered leaves on a pile of fabric scraps. Now she is getting ready to go to school for the first time, and I can't wait to see what she does with her new quilt! Friday, October 22, 2011 This month I was selected to be featured on the Stitchaholics Quilt Blog! I am happy to have this chance to share some of my favorite quilts with you. I hope you enjoy the quilts featured here. Mizmat's Top is made with fabrics from Bick's Yarn & Tapestry line. I chose to make it in the Quilt as a Jumper pattern. I like this quilt because the fabrics I chose go together very well. I used some of my favorite fabrics from my stash, and a few things that were new. I know I should have taken pictures earlier in the day, but I never remember to do that! It was raining when I put the quilt
