Increasingly complex, multi-protein signaling pathways are now implicated in the pathogenesis of a wide variety of diseases. Research in molecular oncology has traditionally been the province of geneticists, molecular biologists and biochemists. These conventional approaches have led to an increasing number of scientific discoveries and advances in our understanding of the genetic basis of cancer. However, novel molecular approaches are now replacing, and, in some cases, supplanting the approaches that have dominated molecular oncology to date. In this review, we describe some of the newer molecular techniques available for use in human cancer research, specifically those aimed at rapidly detecting aberrant DNA sequences, identifying DNA mutations and characterizing chromosomal abnormalities.Pulmonary fibrosis occurs in up to 50% of patients with idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis (IPF) and represents a leading cause of death. Despite its incidence and mortality, the etiology of fibrosis remains
