While I thoroughly enjoyed my Fortnum & Mason Piccadilly Hamper experience, I'm starting to get a little worried about the number of times I'll have to buy gifts from the shops this Christmas. When I was younger I'd be able to travel to London and buy presents for all my friends at only one London department store, but today that's never going to happen. I'd really like to be able to do that, but unfortunately I'm not a celebrity or a billionaire. That means I have to buy gifts from local shops and online retailers in order to make sure they're appropriate. While there are other options available online, there are some things I just can't get online, especially if I'm buying for my whole family. Of course, the first problem is that I don't want to buy any things for my friends. Christmas is a time to gather with your friends and family, but also a time for independent thinkers and people who want to shop on their own. If I go to department stores or online retailers, I'll be surrounded by people I have to buy gifts for. If I go to Aldi, I'll be surrounded by people I have to buy gifts for I'd like to shop in Aldi for my own needs, but the fact that I have to buy gifts for everyone else means that it's not the place for me to go. I don't want to be surrounded by people who can help me with my holiday shopping, and I have to hope the people I'm shopping for don't like it as well. To be frank, if I'm going to spend money on Christmas, I'd rather spend it on things like train tickets or dinner out with my friends. It won't be as fun, but it will mean I can buy presents for a few people who genuinely appreciate it. There are some online retailers that are starting to allow you to buy from independent shops online, but so far I've only ever bought from selfridges.co.uk. I'm not entirely sure how I feel about shopping from websites that don't have a physical presence in the world, but it's a great way to make sure you can buy the right things for the people you're buying for.
