EA Sports also announced that the FIFA Player Impact System has been updated to include more accurate hits, better trapping and tackling physics, and more responsive collision collisions. The new physics engine is able to accurately capture the physical attributes of real-life players. It also includes the ability to “explode” players, resulting in the player being stunned, leaving him defenseless. Trapping, pinning or propelling a player on his back will leave the player open to a free kick. “You can now do things like corner the goalie and have the ball ricochet off the defender’s backside and into the net,” Koller said. “That’s something you couldn’t do before.” “We always wanted to have the best gameplay engine we could out of FIFA,” he added. “We’re proud to have taken this huge leap forward. But we’re not done yet.” As Koller and others noted, as the year progresses, FIFA will continue to iterate and add new features based on the feedback from fans and clubs. “This is our biggest ever FIFA release and there is still more to come,” Koller said. “We’re not done there yet.”
