The Swiss team is coming off a second place finish and two wins in the top division of the Chinese Leagues in the winter season. That success brought them a spot in the World Club Championship which will be held in Shanghai later this month. "Our first goal is always to win," said Valcke. "My players expect that. We don't expect to go with a target of how we can win, but if we have a target to win this World Club Championship, then we don't have a way to lose." It will be a new experience for Guimond, one who played with the FC Barcelona B side as a teenager before moving to the US. "I've never been to a World Club Championship," said Guimond. "It's not a big deal to me. I've played in a World Cup, but it's a different environment. To be honest, it's a big deal for me and I'm looking forward to it. "I'm learning about what I can and cannot do and how I can help the team. It's a team sport and I know what it takes to win, but a World Cup is a different arena. There's nobody on the pitch that knows what to do." Valcke was a closer for the Swiss. "That's a problem," said Valcke. "Everybody wants to be the closer, but there's no one who can close and that creates a problem for the team. We've tried to make everyone a closer, but there's only one close, and that's me." The size of the venue will be a challenge, said Guimond. "There are many, many people in the stands and it will be a big help for us to be able to speak to them." The Swiss are expected to return to Europa League action in early December when they host Rostov in a Tuesday date in St. Gallen. SUTTON Sheffield United head coach Mark Sutton has made an impressive start to life in the Championship. After replacing Neil Warnock at the helm of the Blades, Sutton has guided the club to three consecutive wins to move them into the play-off zone

This article was written by Paul Kneale Abstract The article is a discussion of the varieties of rhetoric that are employed in the field of public relations. Terminology The author uses the following terms in their analysis of the rhetorical situations that occur in public relations: Situational rhetoric This is the discourse that is typically used to describe public relations situations. The situational rhetoric is created specifically in a particular way to meet the needs of the relations based on the communicator's intentions. Verbal rhetoric This means the words that a communicator uses to communicate their intentions to others. Verbal rhetoric is produced with a specific purpose in mind. Nonverbal rhetoric This is used to refer to the actions that a communicator engages in when they are communicating with others. Nonverbal rhetoric, like verbal rhetoric, is used with a specific purpose in mind. Mental models A communicator does not communicate his or her intentions directly to another; rather, the communication occurs through a series of mental models that the communicator creates in order to understand the other. The communicator must create and utilize these mental models in order to effectively communicate their intentions to others. Communicator A communicator is someone who uses both verbal and nonverbal rhetoric to communicate intentions to others. Intention Intention is what the communicator wishes to communicate. Omission Omission means the speaker chooses not to talk about a topic. Self-efficacy Self-efficacy is when a communicator believes that they are capable of performing a particular function or task. Non-verbal rhetoric Nonverbal rhetoric refers to the actions that a communicator performs when communicating with others. For example, when a communicator communicates their intentions to others, they do this through a series of nonverbal actions. The communicator's intentions The communicator has intentions for a particular communication situation. Emotions Emotions are the subjective feelings that occur in a particular situation. Direction Direction is what the communicator is trying to accomplish in that particular communication situation. The changing nature of rhetorical situations Communicators need to create and maintain situational verbal and nonverbal rhetorical circumstances in order to communicate their intentions to others. The nature of these rhetorical situations can change because the communicator's intentions change. The rhetorical situation and
