The 2nd Edition of Object Oriented Programming Using C++ by Tariq MustafaÂ .Saliva analysis of steroids during fluoride treatments of pregnant rats. Salivary gland and serum were obtained from rats during a time course of lactation during fluoride treatments ranging from 0 ppm F or 0 ppm F, 1 ppm F, 2 ppm F, 5 ppm F, 10 ppm F, 14 ppm F, 19 ppm F, 26 ppm F, or 27 ppm F. The mothers were fed a diet containing 0.05 ppm F or 1 ppm F. Saliva was collected from the sialostasis model by pressing the tongue against a sialostat. Samples from serum were collected from the dams after the suckling period. The glands were processed using liquid-liquid extraction and extraction with C18 solid-phase columns. The steroids were derivatized with methyl tertiary butyl ether and measured by GC/MS. The steroidal compositions of the glandular extracts and serum were compared. Statistically significant increases in cortisol and progesterone and a significant decrease in testosterone occurred in the lactating gland compared to the virgin gland at 1 ppm F. At 2 ppm F there was a statistically significant decrease in estradiol, progesterone, and testosterone. At 5 ppm F there was a significant decrease in progesterone and a significant increase in 5 alpha-androstane-3 alpha,17 beta-diol. At 10 ppm F there was a statistically significant increase in progesterone. At 14 ppm F there was a statistically significant decrease in cortisol, estradiol, progesterone,
