Absence of vasopressin in human seminal fluid. The presence of vasopressin in normal human seminal fluid has been investigated by radioimmunoassay and high pressure liquid chromatography and it was shown to be absent. It is suggested that vasopressin is not produced by the testis and therefore spermatozoa do not carry vasopressin receptors. The significance of vasopressin in seminal fluid for the spermatozoa is discussed. Q: Should we have an option to not being upvoted? I just saw a question on the first page of a specific tag where a tag wiki edit to the question was just made and the question was upvoted. This is in violation of the site rule that "upvotes are made by users who find the question interesting". This happened because I had to quickly read the question and upvoted it without reading it. I just saw the edit suggestion at the bottom of the page. I have already read the question and it is a great question and I upvoted it because I am a fan of the author (even though I am not a functional programmer). The author of the question should have read the question first and know that upvotes are for question interesting or useful. I feel this is discrimination. The thing is, I read the question again and this time I understood that the question is focused on an issue that I had just spent some time analyzing and I found it very useful and interesting. Should we have an option to not being upvoted? The way I see it, we have three problems (that I am aware of): Some users are upvoting questions without reading them. Others are not
