These binding agents are embedded into the carbonized wool layer with a penetration depth between 5 and 8.5 μm , depending on the sample. However, the coarseness of the textile limits the possibilities of using only chemical treatments to achieve good electrical charge transport properties. Nevertheless, it is worth noting that even when these binding agents are present, the aramid fibers tested here allowed a good transport of charges in the textile without significant change in the resistivity of the fabrics during the electrochemical experiments.

Electrochemical characterization of the carbonized wool fabrics {#Sec14} -----

----- The behavior of the conductivity of the non-treated fabric and the treated fibers before and after washing were tested in the presence of ethanol in both the linear and cyclic voltammetry configurations. The cyclic voltammetry of fabric S-1 only in ethanol showed that in the presence of only ethanol, the fabric has a resistivity of the order of 10^8 ohm cm which is similar to the resistivity of the carbonized wool fibers (Figure [S7
